When Southern Golf Properties partners John Junker and Bryan Gathright took ownership of Riverhill, it was clear there were repairs, updates, and major renovations needed. The storied facility, which includes the historic Gus F. Schreiner home, a course designed by the Lord Byron Nelson and the great Joe Finger, as well as clubhouse and pro shop, weren't going to get by on paint and tape.

Now that Southern Golf Properties has been in charge for nearly a year, the plan is to incorporate the new while still celebrating the old, renovating locker rooms, eating areas and the golf centers with modern touches.

"We're very excited to bring Riverhill back as the Country Club it deserves to be." said Junker.

The par-72 layout, currently 6,958 yards at its longest, will soon be stretched by another 350 yards by deeper tee boxes to be constructed on five holes. Key changes to the bunkers, fairways, and greens will bring back the key that Nelson and Finger wanted - a shot makers course; using every club you carry.

The changes are part of the strategic plan to showcase Riverhill - the home of Southern Golf Properties - to everyone in the south Texas region.
